Response:

The 50% in class requirement is based on the length of the program, including credits earned from both in-person and distance-learning courses, as confirmed by the eligible DLI. If the course is delivered in person, then it is considered in person/in class; if it is delivered online, then it is considered online. As such, if the co-op placement, health-care practicums, or preceptorship are completed in-person, they should be considered in-class.

Officers rely on documents provided to applicants by designated learning institutions, such as: Letter of Completion of [redacted] and applicants are [redacted] to [redacted] to [redacted] an officer that they meet the requirements.

Objet : Clarification on Hybrid Course Delivery and Its Classification

Good day,

I am writing to seek clarification regarding the classification of hybrid course delivery in relation to Immigration, Refugees, and Citizenship Canada (IRCC)'s study permit and Post-Graduation Work Permit (PGWP) eligibility requirements.

At [redacted] we offer three primary modes of course delivery: online, hybrid, and face-to-face/in-person. Hybrid learning combines both an in-person component and an online component, enabling students to engage with course material through a flexible blend of classroom-based and virtual instruction.

Specifically, we would like to confirm whether hybrid courses, given their partial in-person delivery, are classified as "in-class" courses for the purposes of IRCC policies related to study permits and PGWP eligibility. This clarification is particularly important for international students who rely on accurate interpretations of IRCC's guidelines to ensure compliance with study permit conditions and future eligibility for the PGWP program.

values IRCC's commitment to supporting international students and ensuring clarity in policy interpretation. We hope this inquiry will assist in providing our institution and students with clear guidance on how hybrid courses are considered under the current framework.

We appreciate your attention to this matter and look forward to your response. Should you require any additional information or documentation, please do not hesitate to contact me.

[redacted] and support.

Sincerely,
